

When the handcuffs click:
why governments must
combat Olympic crime.

www.JensWeinreich.de

When the handcuffs click:
why governments must
combat Olympic crime.

www.JensWeinreich.de

Sports entities and sports law shouldn't be bigger than national and international laws.

When you are your own tribunal you can do anything. when you make the laws and decide what is right or wrong, you are bigger than national states.

Governments need to ensure proper and harmonized criminalisation of all forms of corruption in sport.

Specialization of police investigators and prosecutors is the first step in ensuring proper institutional response, followed by significant increase of cooperation within law enforcement agencies.

To achieve better practical results, voluntary and proactive exchange of information, use of special investigative measures (wire-tapping etc) and a regular follow-up on suspicious patterns is needed.

More money - better equipped teams.

To put it short: cooperation,
cooperation, cooperation and real
will of governments to do something is needed!

www.JensWeinreich.de

Sports federations should be under the rules of an international entity like the European Public Prosecutor's office (EPPO), a new entity that is being created by European countries.

Sports entities must be placed under the OECD Anti-Bribery-Convention.

Sports entities and sports law shouldn't be bigger than national and international laws.

When you are your own tribunal you can do anything. when you make the laws and decide what is right or wrong, you are bigger than national states.

Establish a direct cooperation between prosecutors in different countries, avoiding bureaucracy between legal entities.

www.JensWeinreich.de

The last rule is the good old prosecutor's rule: just follow the money. The (olympic) sport business is one of the most successful money laundry systems in the world. To combat that crime such an entity MUST have access to bank data and fiscal paradises.

www.JensWeinreich.de

When the handcuffs click:
why governments must
combat Olympic crime.

www.JensWeinreich.de